ACTIVE INGREDIENTS:

Broccoli rabe is rich in Vitamins such as A, C, and B. It also contains many mineral salts, in particular calcium, iron, and phosphorus. It is low in calories and helps to clean out the intestine because it is rich in fibre. Broccoli rabe contains special sulphur compounds (sulforaphane, dithiolethiones, isothiocyanates, thiocyanates) that help to prevent genetic and cellular problems. In fact, it has long been known that the regular consumption of Brassicaceae is associated with a reduced risk of tumours. Besides those above, broccoli rabe also contains other healthy substances: Vitamin C, which is very important for the immune system; carotenoids, and flavonoids (pigments present in all red, orange, and dark green fruits and vegetables), which are important for maintaining health and for their antioxidant properties.

CHARACTERISTICS:

Broccoli rabe, as the name suggests, are the top of the Brassica rapa plant, which belongs to the Brassicaceae family (the same family as cabbage). They are referred to in different ways across Italy, such as "broccoletti", "cime di rapa", and "friarielli". They are typical of southern Italy, such as the regions of Apulia, Calabria, Basilicata, and Latium, where they can be found in a range of different varieties and recipes.

DID YOU KNOW?

Broccoli rabe and cabbage have always been associated with peasant food, and the typical smell of these vegetables while cooking has always been associated to soup kitchens, or at least to hard-earned, working-class food. Today, however, these vegetables are becoming newly appreciated both from a gastronomical and a nutritional point of view.

ADVICE FROM THE CHEF:

The product, which is conveniently packaged, can be eaten immediately upon opening the container, dressing it with extra virgin olive oil, salt, garlic, and chilli pepper. You can also sauté the broccoli rabe with garlic, bread crumbs, and chilli peppers, and you can even add anchovies if you like. This is a simple, tasty, and healthy dish from traditional peasant cuisine. Buon appetito!!!
